- If there will be two groups of the category (6-10 competitors), then the winners of the separated groups will be fighting for the gold and silver medals. The second bests of the groups will get the bronze medals.*
- If there will be three groups of the category (11-15 competitors), then the winners of the separated groups will fight for the medals in a new all-against-all round. There will be only one bronze medal in this case.*
- If there will be four groups of the category (16-20 competitors), then the winners of the separated groups will fight for the medals in a new all-against-all round. There will be two bronze medals in this case.*
- Over 20 competitors the winners of the separated groups will fight for the medals in a new pyramidal system round.*

The set up of the pairs could be optional: woman-woman, man-man, woman-man. The competition will take place in two separated rounds. In the first round all the pairs perform their sparring and they get a score for it. The best four will perform the sparring again. The first pair will be the opponent of the third one and the second pair will be the opponent of the fourth one. From this point the pyramid system of elimination will be used. At the beginning of the competition the order of the pairs will be decided by lot. Duration of the sparring: minimum 50 seconds – maximum 75 seconds.
